

Dominique GUELLEC is economist at the OECD (Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development) in Paris, where he is analysing innovation related issues and policies, including R&D and intellectual property rights (IPR). From January 2004 to December 2005, he was Chief Economist of the European Patent Office in Munich, with the task of informing EPO policy for economic related matters and to conduct studies and projects on economic aspects of patenting in Europe. He has published many books, reports and academic articles on economic growth, productivity, R&D, technological change and patenting.